

"The life is a race,
Race is never reversing,
Life seems like permanent marathon,
We can choose to be an audience, for, not always we need to win the race!
Time waits for none,
But life is just one, only one!
Follow the time sometime, make it follow you for some time. Life is trade off, indeed."

2. RISING MISTRUST AMONG MODERN HUMANS ENDANGERS THEIR SURVIVAL

STRUCTURE:

- A. Introduction
- B. Thesis statement
- C. Mistrust
- D. Trust and human life
- E. How mistrust threatens survival
- F. Why there is mistrust
- G. Is it peculiar to modern era?
- H. Is it exaggerated?
- I. Areas of increased trust
- J. Way forward
- K. Conclusion

A. Introduction

"Man is a social animal".

Aristotle said this many centuries ago. Humans can survive only being part of a society and society is made of a network of relations and dependencies. Relations like parents and children, spouse, siblings, cousins; also friends, colleagues, etc. Also, the society links us by mutual interdependence. A consumer is dependent on a trader who sells crops and the trader in turn depends on a farmer. A student depends on teacher, a producer depends on labour, etc.

These relations and dependencies are built on one value that is trust. Trust is the faith in someone. Due to trust we interact with them and also give what we have and take what they give. This creates a society and gives it ability to survive.

B. Thesis statement

In this essay, how mistrust is affecting human survival is seen firstly. Then, the reasons for rising mistrust are analysed. Some questions whether we exaggerated the whole phenomena are raised. Some possible solutions to build trust are enlisted before concluding the essay.